Missouri Fescue Seed Report

As fescue season approaches so does the speculation about how this years crop will turn out. Buyers that have been out scouting generally feel the crop currently available for harvest is near average, however many question how much of that available crop will actually be harvested. Pre-season prices are over 50% lower than last years' prices resulting in talk of some combines remaining parked. Lower prices are a result of significant carry over at most elevators due in part to low demand for new landscaping seed a result of slow construction and the economy crisis. Swathing is expected to begin within the next week with the possibly of some seed beginning to show up by mid to late next week however moisture is expected to be high. (Dry: Moisture 12-14% - Wet: Moisture greater than 14%) (Prices per lb.) Southwest, Northeast, Central, South Central, Northwest, and Southeast: .18 wet, .20 dry.

Missouri Crop Progress and Condition June 07, 09
